The image shows a page from an old Hebrew manuscript. The text is written in a square Hebrew script, organized into two columns. A prominent watermark with the text "Digitized by Google" is overlaid diagonally across the page. On the right margin, there is a vertical column of text, followed by a short horizontal line, and then a single word "וְ" (vav) followed by another short horizontal line.

The image displays a dense grid of black Hebrew text on a white background. The text is arranged in a large central column and several horizontal rows extending from the bottom right corner towards the center. The font is a standard Hebrew script. A small orange mark is visible near the bottom left edge of the grid.

The image shows a dense, abstract pattern of black ink strokes on a white background. The pattern consists of numerous vertical and horizontal lines, some of which are thick and others thin. There are also several diagonal lines and some curved or zigzagging lines. The overall effect is one of a complex, almost organic or mathematical, geometric design.

יְהוָה־אֱלֹהִים

A vertical column of approximately 20 horizontal black bars of varying lengths, creating a jagged, stepped pattern.
